I INTRODUCTION

i The current Canadian wealth situation

This is an age of resilience. Looking back to the global stage in 2022, there were a number of cataclysmic events and circumstances: war in Ukraine, rampant inflation, supply chain shortages and a steep stock market decline that many thought would be a prelude to a global recession. Using the Hobbesian phrase, 2022 was nasty, brutish and short. In 2023, we have begun to adapt to a post-covid world, which has changed in many fundamental ways from the one we knew before the pandemic.

Canada emerged from the pandemic with much to be grateful for. It is forecast to have the second-fastest growing economy in the G7 in 2023, the inflation rate is now cooling and half of many other countries, such as the UK, and its unemployment rate remains low, as does its debt-to-GDP ratio. There are strains, however: scarcity when it comes to infrastructure investment, housing and talent. Private clients continue to fear they are being targeted by the government to raise tax revenue to pay for increasing government spending. Income and wealth inequality is divisive and ever-more exacerbated by inflation, rising interest rates and less affordability. Private client practice has been robust; there is more focus on this area, and increasing client demand given the aging baby boomer population.

ii Key factors in respect of private clients

Canada's constitutional system is a federal one, with a clear division of powers between different levels of government. Its primary legal heritage for all provinces and territories, with the exception of Quebec, is based on English common law; Quebec's is based on civil law.

From the private client perspective, Canada offers the stability of a highly developed legal and court system and charter-based human rights protections. Property law, including succession, is a matter of provincial and territorial jurisdiction. Many modern and innovative concepts affecting private clients have been pioneered or progressed ahead of other jurisdictions in Canadian law, including equalisation of property between spouses on marital breakdown and death in several Canadian provinces recognising marriage as an equal economic partnership, recognition of common law spouses' and same-sex spouses' property and support rights, same-sex marriage and medical assistance in dying.

Many Canadian jurisdictions have modern laws governing incapacity and substitute decision-making to take into account the need for a modern infrastructure to deal with an increasingly ageing population. Canada's multiculturalism and relatively open-door immigration policy, which are required to maintain positive population growth, expand the Canadian economy and are increasingly geared to attracting more entrepreneurs and skilled workers, have together created and contributed to a dynamic, sophisticated, diverse and innovative Canadian culture. Post-pandemic, Canada is set to bring in almost 1.5 million new permanent residents to boost Canada's post-pandemic economic recovery.

II TAX

i Personal taxation

Federal and provincial or territorial income tax

Canada taxes Canadian residents on their worldwide income from all sources, and non-residents on certain Canadian-source income, subject to international tax treaties. Income for Canadian tax purposes includes income from employment, business, property, 50 per cent of capital gains, and various other income sources, less certain deductions.

Canada is a federal state consisting of 10 provinces and three territories. The provinces and territories also tax income generally on the same basis as the federal government, except for Quebec, and increased federal tax applies to certain income not earned in a province or territory. Canadian tax is levied at graduated rates of up to approximately 54 per cent in combined federal and provincial rates on taxable income, less applicable tax credits.

Canada taxes non-residents on income earned in Canada, notably income from business or employment in Canada, and from certain taxable Canadian property, including Canadian real estate. A withholding tax of 25 per cent is deducted from certain income payable to non-residents, subject to international tax treaties that reduce the applicable rates.

Capital gains regime

Unlike most jurisdictions, Canada has no gift or inheritance tax. Instead, it levies taxes on capital gains. As of 2023, 50 per cent of capital gains are included in income upon actual disposition or deemed disposition. There is an exemption for capital gains on a principal residence and a lifetime exemption for capital gains on qualified small business corporation shares (C$971,190 in 2023) and on qualified farm or fishing property (C$1 million in 2023). The basic tax unit is the individual. Limited opportunities exist for income splitting, including through the use of trusts. Tax on capital gains may be deferred on certain transfers of property, for example, between spouses, or on rollovers into private corporations in exchange for shares.

ii Developments relating to personal taxation

Provincial or territorial tax brackets for high earners

The combined provincial or territorial and federal tax rates for high earners in 2023 range from 44.5 per cent in Nunavut to 54.8 per cent in Newfoundland and Labrador. The highest tax rate in 2023 in Ontario is 53.53 per cent. In 2015, Alberta introduced graduated tax rates for taxpayers. Prior to the new rates, all Albertans paid tax based on a flat provincial tax rate of 10 per cent. As of 1 October 2015, the highest combined provincial and federal tax rate for Albertans has been 48 per cent. Over the past 10 years, there has been a significant increase in the top marginal rate. Combined rates in Ontario and Quebec in 2009 were below 50 per cent.

Alternative minimum tax

Canada has had an alternative minimum tax (AMT) since 1986, and it imposes a minimum level of tax on taxpayers who claim certain deductions, exemptions and tax credits that reduce tax they owe to low levels. The 2023 federal budget contains proposals that target high-income individuals, beginning in 2024, including increasing the AMT rate from 15 to 20.5 per cent, and the budget projects that an additional C$3 billion of tax revenue will be generated over five years.

Intergenerational small business and farm transfers

A private member's bill received royal assent on 29 June 2021 and is now in effect. It limits the application of certain anti-avoidance rules that resulted in a sale of small business shares to an arm's-length purchaser being taxed at lower capital gains rates than a sale to a child or grandchild. The anti-avoidance rules operate so that the owner receives a dividend at higher rates. The result of the former rules was to penalise intergenerational sales because of this increased tax burden. The legislation levels the playing field so that a sale to a family member has the same level of tax as would a sale to an arm's-length purchaser, thereby facilitating intergenerational sales. However, the federal government later announced it would introduce legislation to safeguard against tax avoidance. Proposed amendments were introduced in the 2023 federal budget to come into effect in 2024 that include new restrictions and additional requirements with the objective of ensuring that there is a genuine transfer of the business to the next generation.

Employee ownership trusts

The 2023 federal budget also introduced a new trust called an employee ownership trust to facilitate the sale of a business to an employee group, which has favourable tax treatment and is a new concept in Canada, but which follows a growing trend in other jurisdictions including the United Kingdom and the US to increase employee ownership of businesses. This vehicle will potentially provide another option for business succession planning.

Revised federal legislation on the taxation of trusts and new reporting requirements for trusts

Certain estates and testamentary trusts are taxed at graduated rates applicable to individuals, while trusts established during a person's lifetime are generally taxed at the top of marginal tax rates applicable to individuals. In 2016, graduated rates for certain estates and testamentary trusts were eliminated. Now, the top marginal rate is applied to testamentary trusts and certain estates. However, graduated rates continue to be available to 'graduated rate estates' for 36 months and to certain testamentary trusts having disabled beneficiaries who are eligible for the federal disability tax credit. In addition, the taxation year end for testamentary trusts is now 31 December, and testamentary trusts are required to make instalment payments of income tax.

New trust reporting rules were introduced in July 2018, the implementation of which was delayed and which are now effective for taxation years ending on or after 31 December 2023 further to federal Bill C-32, which received royal assent on 15 December 2022. The legislation also requires a bare trust to file a tax return and provide disclosure of information. The new rules require the identity of settlors, trustees and beneficiaries and those who have control over trustee decisions to pay income or capital, such as a protector, to be reported to the government. As well as this, trusts (with limited exceptions) must file a tax return, and for many trusts, the filing deadline for their first tax return will be 31 March 2024. Previously, a trust would file a tax return only if it received income or made distributions to the beneficiaries in a year. Non-resident trusts that are required to file a trust tax return are also subject to the new disclosure rules. There are significant penalties for non-compliance of the greater of C$2500 or 5 per cent of the highest fair market value of the trust's assets. With the onset of these new obligations, it is incumbent on trustees to gather the necessary information.

Residence of trusts for tax purposes

The Supreme Court of Canada in 2012 clarified the law on the factual tax residence of a trust in Fundy Settlement v. Canada.<sup>2</sup> The Supreme Court of Canada held that the residence of a trust is where the central management and control of the trust occurs, a significant change from the former focus on a trustee's residence. Discovery Trust v. Canada<sup>3</sup> was the first decision to apply the test that was articulated in Fundy Settlement. In Discovery Trust, the court held that the beneficiaries' involvement in the administration of the trust did not result in the trust being resident in the province in which the beneficiaries resided, as the trustee still made all decisions with respect to the administration of the trust. Instead, the court held that the trust was resident in the province in which the trustee resided. The Canada Revenue Agency (CRA) position in determining the location of the central management and where control of a trust takes place includes a review of whether the control rests with the trustee or someone else.<sup>4</sup>

In addition to factual residence, trusts may also be subject to statutory deemed residence rules for Canadian tax purposes. Trusts that are not factually resident in Canada may be deemed resident in Canada for certain tax purposes, including computing the trust's income. Deemed residence may apply to a trust if it has a Canadian-resident contributor or beneficiary.

Principal residence rules

In the Canadian system, capital gains are subject to taxation, and arise on the disposition of capital property. The capital gain is the difference between the property's adjusted cost base plus costs of disposal, and the proceeds of disposition. The adjusted cost is the actual cost of the property, subject to certain adjustments. Proceeds of disposition are, generally, the actual proceeds, but are subject to certain deeming provisions that will deem the proceeds to be equal to the fair market value of the property in respect of dispositions that are not at arm's length. A property is exempt from taxation on capital gains in the years that it is designated a principal residence.

Since 3 October 2016, both individuals and trusts must report the disposition of a principal residence and make a principal residence designation in the prescribed form and manner. The period in which the CRA can reassess beyond the normal reassessment period is indefinitely extended if the disposition of a property is not reported and a penalty applies for late filing. For dispositions on or after 3 October 2016, an individual who is a non-resident of Canada in the year of acquisition of a principal residence loses the bonus exemption year when calculating the principal residence exemption.

As of 2016, only certain eligible trusts may designate a property as a principal residence for any year of ownership after 2016. Eligible trusts include qualified disability trusts, alter ego trusts, spousal or common law partner trusts, joint spousal and joint common law partner trusts, and certain trusts for the exclusive benefit of the settlor during the settlor's lifetime. Eligible trusts also include 'orphan' trusts where the settlor died before the start of the year; the eligible beneficiary is a minor child whose parent died before the start of the year and is a minor child of the settlor, even if the other parent is living; and at least one beneficiary of the trust is a resident of Canada during the year and is a specified beneficiary of the trust for the year.

There is continued speculation and significant media and professional commentary that the government may in future introduce a number of tax reforms to pay for the pandemic, including curtailing the principal residence exemption so that it is no longer unlimited, but instead is capped. Canada is one of the very few Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) countries that allow for a full exemption. Criticism has been levelled that a full exemption results in increased income inequality, because the owners of high-value homes receive a windfall by allowing them to be untaxed.

Non-resident purchasers of residential properties

To date, two Canadian provinces – Ontario and British Columbia – have enacted additional land transfer taxes that apply to foreign buyers. As of 21 April 2017, the Ontario government introduced a 15 per cent tax on the value of the consideration when a residential property in the Greater Golden Horseshoe area is purchased or acquired by individuals who are not citizens or permanent residents of Canada, foreign corporations, or taxable trustees of trusts involving foreign individuals or corporate trustees or beneficiaries. As of 30 March 2022, the rate was increased to 20 per cent and expanded to apply to all residential properties purchased across Ontario. Residential property is defined as land that contains between one and six single family residences. The Toronto non-resident speculation tax applies in addition to the generally applicable land transfer taxes payable on Toronto properties at rates of up to 5 per cent (2.5 per cent being the Ontario land transfer tax and an additional 2.5 per cent being the Toronto land transfer tax).

As of 2 August 2016, British Columbia enacted a similar 15 per cent property transfer tax payable by foreign individuals, corporations or taxable trustees in addition to the general property transfer tax of approximately 2.5 per cent on transfers of residential property located in the metro Vancouver regional district (Vancouver district). The 2018 British Columbia budget introduced an increase to the tax to 20 per cent, effective as of 21 February 2018, and expanded the tax outside the Vancouver district to cover several other regions. British Columbia also has an annual speculation and vacancy tax that has a rate of between 0.5 to 2 per cent for certain foreign owners, and it applies to residential properties in certain areas of the province. In 2017, Vancouver also implemented an empty-home tax, which is 3 per cent in 2023.

A 1 per cent federal tax effective 1 January 2022 on foreign-owned vacant property under the new underused housing tax (UHT) rules is important to understand and comply with, as many Canadian and foreign owners will have filing obligations even if they are exempt from paying tax, and face stiff penalties for not filing a UHT return, due 20 April 2023.

However, the CRA has announced penalties will be waived for the 2022 calendar year if required returns are filed and tax paid by 31 October 2023. The objective of the tax is to discourage housing speculation and vacancy of homes in major urban centres. The 2022 federal budget took aim at foreign purchasers and proposed a ban on foreign buyers of residential real estate for a period of two years in an effort to deal with the housing crisis and housing affordability. Legislation is now in effect under the Prohibition on the Purchase of Residential Property by Non-Canadians Act, which bans certain foreign buyers from 1 January 2023 until 31 December 2025.

General anti-avoidance rule in respect of income tax

The Income Tax Act (Tax Act) contains a general anti-avoidance rule (GAAR), which may be applied to deny a tax benefit otherwise available under the Tax Act where certain conditions are met. In considering whether the GAAR applies, a court will generally consider whether there was a tax benefit, whether the transaction (or series of transactions) giving rise to the tax benefit was an avoidance transaction and whether the avoidance transaction giving rise to the tax benefit was abusive. The 2023 federal budget proposes changes to the GAAR, including to reduce the threshold for determining whether a transaction is an avoidance transaction from a 'primary purpose' test to 'one of the main purposes' test. In addition, a rule regarding economic substance has been introduced that provides that if an avoidance transaction that significantly lacks economic substance is indicative (but not conclusive), then the transaction is a misuse or an abuse. A penalty will apply to a transaction that is subject to the GAAR of 25 per cent of the tax benefit.

Whistleblower rules, audit initiatives and compliance measures

The CRA launched the offshore tax informant programme in January 2014, under which the CRA will enter into a contract to provide financial compensation to individuals who provide information that leads to the assessment and collection of additional federal taxes in excess of C$100,000, provided all recourse rights associated with the assessment have expired and the non-compliant activity involves property located outside Canada or certain other foreign elements. As of 2020, the CRA has assessed over C$60 million in additional taxes. Banks and other financial intermediaries are required to report international electronic funds transfers of C$10,000 and over to the CRA. Such transfers are currently reported to Canada's Financial Transactions and Reports Analysis Centre of Canada (FINTRAC). The CRA's related party audit programme (RPAP) is ongoing, under which individuals, including high net worth individuals (generally, with over C$50 million) or those with complex planning using many related entities, have been asked to provide detailed information and supporting documents about Canadian and foreign interests. Thresholds relating to value and complexity have been relaxed, and individuals not under audit are also being asked for such information.

There are over 30 audit teams across the country involved in the RPAP programme. Between 2014 to 2019, more than 900 audits were completed. However, in response to a question tabled in Parliament in June 2021, the CRA says that to date there have been no prosecutions or convictions, but that it has referred 44 cases to its criminal investigations programme since 2015, only two of which proceeded to federal prosecutors with no charges laid afterwards. The lack of prosecutions follows more than 6,770 audits since 2015. However, about 3,000 cases are ongoing, some within the court process. An aggressive tax planning reporting regime generally requires advisers to report to the CRA information concerning certain transactions on Form RC312 by 30 June of the following year. Reportable transactions or a reportable series of transactions will generally include an avoidance transaction or series of transactions for the purposes of GAAR if they feature two of the following: contingent fees, confidentiality protection or contractual protection. Where the Form is not filed, a denial of tax benefits and possible penalties may result.

Possible upcoming tax reforms

There is significant speculation about what tax reform measures might be introduced in future. The government has enunciated very clearly in numerous statements its concern to address extreme income inequality, which has only increased as a result of the pandemic. Possible tax reforms, apart from curtailing the principal residence exemption previously discussed, may include a higher corporate tax rate and increasing the inclusion rate for capital gains from 50 per cent to a higher percentage. Arguments for capital gains tax reform include that capital gains are concentrated among high income earners and high net worth individuals and their current tax favoured treatment is not equitable. It is possible that the rate of graduated sales tax could also be increased. There has been significant professional writing and media discussion about the introduction of a wealth tax, estate tax or inheritance tax, or some combination of them. An annual wealth tax was proposed by the New Democratic Party (NDP) in both the 2019 and 2021 federal elections, and the NDP also introduced a motion to the House of Commons in 2020 for an annual wealth tax, but it was defeated. In July 2021, the Parliamentary Budget Office released a report that considered the revenue that could be generated on a 1 per cent tax on family net wealth over C$20 million and on a one-time wealth tax. What lies ahead remains to be seen.

iii Cross-border structuring

Immigration to Canada

Canada relies heavily on immigration and offers certain tax concessions to immigrants. These same concessions, along with the lack of gift and inheritance tax, make Canada an attractive destination. Upon immigration to Canada, an individual receives a step up in the tax cost of his or her capital property (excluding taxable Canadian property), which eliminates Canadian tax liability for capital gains accrued to that point. In some cases, it may be possible to transfer a foreign-registered pension plan into a Canadian-registered retirement savings plan on a tax-free basis.

Non-resident trusts and immigration trusts

Certain non-resident trusts established by non-resident settlors, provided various conditions are met, may be exempt from Canadian taxes and can distribute trust capital to Canadian-resident beneficiaries tax-free, which provides tax-planning opportunities where a non-resident trust is situated in a low-tax jurisdiction. However, the opportunities for trust planning with non-resident trusts have been significantly curtailed by revised Section 94 of the Tax Act, which deems certain trusts with Canadian-resident contributors or Canadian-resident beneficiaries to be Canadian-resident and taxable on their worldwide income. Where a trust is deemed to be Canadian-resident, Canadian-resident contributors and beneficiaries may be liable for the trust's Canadian income tax, along with the trust itself.

Previously, an immigration trust could be set up to benefit an immigrant to Canada and his or her family, and the income and capital gains in the immigration trust could accrue tax-free for up to 60 months following immigration. If the trust was settled in a foreign jurisdiction (including a low-tax offshore jurisdiction) with foreign trustees who held the foreign investment assets, there could be significant tax savings depending on the applicable tax rates. However, this planning opportunity was unexpectedly eliminated as a result of the 2014 federal budget. Immigration trusts, including those established prior to the legislative changes, are now subject to Canadian tax on their worldwide income, and the 60-month exemption from the deemed residence rule is eliminated.

Emigration from Canada

A taxpayer emigrating from Canada must pay a departure tax, which taxes gains on his or her property accrued during his or her Canadian residency, subject to exceptions including for certain Canadian situs property and retirement plans. Payment of the departure tax may be deferred upon providing security to the CRA.

Tax treaties

Canada is party to many bilateral tax treaties, which in part aim to prevent double taxation of income. Among other benefits, Canada's tax treaties generally include tiebreaker rules for determining tax residency for treaty purposes and to reduce the amount of withholding tax otherwise payable by taxpayers who are entitled to benefit under such treaties. Often, the withholding tax is reduced to 15 per cent from 25 per cent, and in certain cases to zero per cent. Owing, however, to variations in the internal taxation laws of treaty nations, there can be mismatches in tax credits and timing that are not addressed in the treaties. In 2014, Canada ratified an intergovernmental agreement (IGA) relating to the US Foreign Account Tax Compliance Act (FATCA), a US law that imposes strict reporting requirements to the US taxing authority, including on financial institutions located in Canada. Canada has also implemented the OECD Common Reporting Standard (CRS), which is based on FATCA. As of 1 July 2017, financial institutions located in Canada are subject to the CRS and are required to provide the CRA with certain information pertaining to accounts and account holders. Information exchanges commenced in June 2018. On 20 April 2020, the CRA released detailed revised guidance on FATCA and the CRS.

Foreign investment entity and foreign trust rules

Foreign trust rules designed to more effectively tax Canadian residents' passive investment, including income arising through non-resident trusts, have been enacted, following numerous amendments to draft legislation over a protracted period. The non-resident trust rules deem a trust to be resident in Canada if there is a Canadian-resident contributor, broadly defined, or a Canadian-resident beneficiary who meets certain requirements, and require tax to be withheld on distributions from trusts deemed Canadian-resident, subject to exceptions. An election may be made to treat a portion of the trust as non-resident that will not generally be taxable in Canada. New provisions for taxing offshore investment funds have also been enacted, along with transitional provisions for those who filed under proposed foreign investment entity rules that were never enacted. Additional reporting requirements for certain non-resident trusts and, as noted previously, new reporting rules, were introduced in 2018.

Canadian taxpayers holding specified foreign property outside Canada with a cost amount of C$100,000 or more are required to provide more detailed information about such property on a revised Form T1135, a foreign income verification statement including names of the countries and institutions where assets are held, foreign income earned on the assets and a maximum cost amount of the assets in the applicable year. If Form T1135 is filed late or contains certain errors or omissions, the normal reassessment period is extended for three years, and severe penalties apply for failure to file.

iv Regulatory issues

Regulation of banking and related industries

A significant portion of Canada's private wealth services are highly concentrated in the hands of six major Canadian national banks. In 2017, Bloomberg Markets magazine ranked four Canadian banks among the world's top-10 strongest banks with US$100 billion or more of assets. No other country dominated the list as Canada did, and Canada continues to shine when it comes to international recognition of the strength of its banking sector. In general, the major Canadian banks are better capitalised and have more liquidity given tight regulation. In June 2023, capital ratios were increased to 3.5 per cent by 50 base points in view of rising borrowing costs, high debt levels and stress on the financial system. Banking is federally regulated by the Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions Canada, while the related investment industry, trust companies and insurance firms are regulated both federally and provincially. Canada's major banks are strongly capitalised and tend to have relatively conservative lending policies compared to other banking institutions.

In 1986, the federal government began to eliminate the four pillars of Canadian finance: Canada's traditional regulatory separation between banks, trust companies, insurance companies and investment companies. Numerous acquisitions of investment firms and trust companies by the six largest Canadian banks followed. In 1998, the proposed merger of two of the largest major Canadian banks was rejected by the federal government. In the past decade, Canada's major banks have expanded significantly into the United States. Canada's major banks offer an increasing array of services, including daily banking, investment services, financial planning and insurance, and wealth management, which tend to be fairly uniform among the banks.

For Canada, deregulation resulted in a flurry of mergers and acquisitions in the 1990s, leading to consolidation and the three largest insurance companies controlling about two-thirds of the domestic market.

v Issues affecting holders of active business interests

Corporate taxation

Canada's tax environment includes low corporate taxes levied at flat rates. The rates declined for small businesses' active business income between 2007 and 2017 but have substantially increased since then, making Canada far less competitive than previously, particularly given the substantial decrease in the US corporate tax rates, the United States being Canada's largest trading partner. However, the Biden administration has proposed in the US 2024 federal budget to raise the corporate tax rate to 28 per cent from 21 per cent, which will substantially narrow the gap. The combined net federal and provincial corporate tax rates applicable to general corporations' active business income in 2023 range between 23 and 31 per cent.

Preferential tax treatment is offered to small business corporations, which benefit from a reduced combined federal and provincial tax rate of between 9 and 12.2 per cent on the first C$500,000 of its active business income. A small business corporation is a Canadian-controlled private corporation (CCPC) carrying on active business in Canada. The small business income limit is reduced on a straight-line basis for CCPCs that alone or as members of an associated group have taxable capital employed in Canada of between C$10 million and C$50 million in the previous year. Taxable capital is generally comprised of the corporation's retained earnings, surpluses and advances.

In 2018, amendments to tax legislation were enacted to reduce the small business deduction in the case of corporations that have more than C$50,000 per year of passive investment income. These changes follow the 2017 taxation changes that target corporations that accumulate income that had benefited from the low small business tax rate. The small business limit for CCPCs and associated corporations is reduced on a straight-line basis for CCPCs that earn between C$50,000 and C$150,000 of investment income such that the small business limit would be completely eliminated where a corporation earns C$150,000 of investment income per year. For this purpose, a definition of investment income or adjusted aggregate investment income (AAII) was introduced. Generally, AAII will exclude taxable capital gains from the sale of active investments and investment income that is incidental to the business. These exclusions are included for the purpose of protecting investment interests in the Canadian innovation industry. Ontario and New Brunswick subsequently decided they would not create parallel legislation and instead have preserved the small business limit at the provincial level.

Shares of a small business corporation are eligible for a lifetime capital gains exemption of C$800,000 in total, indexed for inflation from 2014 (C$971,190 in 2023), as are certain qualified farm and fishing properties (capital gains exemption being C$1 million in 2023).

Investment income earned in a CCPC is taxed at very high rates. For instance, in 2023, CCPCs in Prince Edward Island, the province with the highest provincial tax rate for investment income earned in CCPCs, will pay income taxes on their investment income at a rate of 54.7 per cent. In other provinces, CCPC investment income is taxed at rates ranging between 46.7 per cent in Alberta and 53.7 per cent in Newfoundland and Labrador. General corporations (non-CCPCs), who do not benefit from the small business deduction pay taxes on their investment income at lower rates – at combined federal and provincial rates of up to 31 per cent in 2023.

For extracting corporate income by way of dividends, a gross-up dividend tax credit (an enhanced tax credit in the case of dividends funded by the corporation's active business income that did not benefit from the small business tax rate) and a corporate refundable tax mechanism (in the case of corporations that earn investment income) is provided to avoid double taxation of income earned in the corporation that is subsequently paid to its individual shareholders, who are taxed at their marginal tax rates.

The 2017 tax amendments made significant changes to shareholder taxation. The changes make dividends received by individual shareholders taxable at the top marginal rates (these provisions being called a tax on split income (TOSI)), unless the shareholders receiving the dividends can show substantial labour or capital contributions to the operations of the business of the corporation. For example, TOSI will not apply to a business owner's spouse or common-law partner aged 65 or older; shareholders over the age of 18 who make a substantial labour contribution to the corporation's business of at least 20 hours per week; and shareholders over the age of 25 who own 10 per cent or more interest in the corporation that earns less than 90 per cent of its income from the provision of services. The shares cannot be shares of a professional corporation. Those shareholders who do not meet these 'bright line' tests will face a 'reasonableness' test review by the CRA.

There are generally two kinds of dividends that can be paid to individual shareholders of CCPCs: eligible and non-eligible dividends. Generally, eligible dividends are funded by the corporation's income that did not benefit from the small business tax rate. Eligible and non-eligible dividends are taxed at different rates in the hands of individual shareholders. For instance, in 2023 in Ontario, the highest individual tax rate on eligible dividends is 39.34 per cent and that on non-eligible dividends is 47.74 per cent. As part of the current tax integration rules, when a corporation pays a dividend to its shareholders, it may be able to receive a tax refund that is based on the corporation's notional refundable dividend tax on hand (RDTOH) account, which is calculated in reference to the corporation's investment income. New rules introduced in 2018 that apply to taxation years after 2018 limit CCPCs' access to the RDTOH refund to the payment of non-eligible dividends, with an exception for that portion of the RDTOH that arises from the corporation's eligible portfolio income. A tax-deferred transfer or rollover of certain eligible property to a taxable Canadian corporation for consideration, which must include shares of the corporation, is available, subject to certain conditions. The corporation may retain the shareholder's tax cost of the property or may elect a higher tax cost, within limits. Among other results, the corporation then assumes the tax liability relating to gains on the property, the payment of which is deferred to a later date.

Goods and services tax, provincial sales tax and harmonised sales tax

Federally, Canada levies a 5 per cent supply-side tax on most services and goods, including those made in Canada and imported, and certain property. Goods and services tax (GST) applies at all stages of production, subject to an input tax credit for tax paid at an earlier stage, and businesses are responsible for collecting and remitting the tax. The provinces and territories levy their own sales tax in addition to GST. Five provinces have harmonised GST with provincial sales tax, and this is known as harmonised sales tax. Combined, these taxes range from 5 per cent (in Alberta, British Columbia, Manitoba, the Northwest Territories, Nunavut, Quebec, Saskatchewan and Yukon) to 15 per cent (New Brunswick, Newfoundland and Labrador, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island).

III SUCCESSION

i Overview of succession in Canada

Provincial and territorial jurisdiction

In Canada, succession to property on death is generally a matter within the jurisdiction of the provinces and territories. Of Canada's 10 provinces and three territories, 12 are governed under common law, and one – the province of Quebec – under civil law. With respect to aboriginal Canadians who are subject to the Indian Act, succession to property on death falls within the jurisdiction of the federal government. Certain First Nations, however, have entered into self-government agreements that permit the enactment of individualised laws, including those that relate to succession. These two latter scenarios are beyond the scope of this chapter.

Conflicts of laws

With regard to determining the applicable law, the law governing succession to movables is generally that of the testator's domicile, and the law governing succession to immovables typically that of the jurisdiction where the property is located. Formal validity, which includes such matters as execution requirements for a will, is determined by conflicts of law principles

(and in respect of succession to movables is also generally that of the testator's domicile at date of death and in respect of succession to immovables is typically the jurisdiction where the property is located), and in several provinces has been expanded by statute.

For clients with certain connections to both Canada and a participating European Union Member State, it is important to consider the impact of the EU Succession Regulation (Regulation (EU) No. 650/2012), which is in effect for deaths post-17 August 2015, including as it relates to a person's ability to choose the law of his or her nationality to govern certain succession issues.

Probate or equivalent court process

The common law principle of testamentary freedom is the general rule in Canadian succession law, as modified by contract or legislation. After the testator's death, a will is typically submitted to probate or equivalent court process, whereby it is validated and the executors' appointment as legal representatives is confirmed. In this process, the will and supporting documents, which may include a detailed asset listing, become public. In a 2021 decision,<sup>5</sup> the Supreme Court of Canada confirmed Canada's fundamental principle of open court proceedings and upheld the appellate court's decision lifting a sealing order to probate files, the estate trustees having unsuccessfully argued that the court files should be sealed to protect the privacy and dignity of the victims of violence.

Probate fees are typically levied in the form of a flat fee, or tax based on a percentage of estate assets (e.g., approximately 1.5 per cent in Ontario). In some provinces, in particular those with a high-rate structure to probate a will, the option of creating a second, non-probate will that governs private company shares and other assets that do not require a court grant of probate to administer is often used to minimise probate fees and tax. A Quebec notarial will will not need to be submitted to probate in that province. Manitoba abolished probate fees effective 1 July 2020 as well as provincial sales tax on the preparation of wills.

Once probate has been granted, the resulting certificate, grant or other like document is used by the personal representative to deal with third-party institutions and entities in the process of transferring title to the personal representative and gathering in the assets.

Legislative provisions for validity

Each province and territory has its own set of rules regarding the formal requirements that must be met to make and modify wills. Alberta, British Columbia, Manitoba, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, Saskatchewan, Nunavut and, most recently, Ontario, are substantial compliance jurisdictions. The Quebec Civil Code provides guidance to the court for reconstituting a will upon demand.<sup>6</sup> Substantial compliance provisions vary from province to province, but allow a court to validate a document or writing that would otherwise be invalid based on formal writing requirements. In the recent unreported decision of Grattan v. Grattan, the Ontario court validated an unsigned will. Newfoundland and Labrador, Yukon and the Northwest Territories are strict compliance jurisdictions.

Across Canada, the validity of pour-over clauses has been considered. A pour-over clause is a clause in a testator's will that typically names a trust created during the testator's lifetime as a beneficiary under the testator's will. In 2019 in Quinn Estate v. Rydland, the British Columbia Court of Appeal found a pour-over clause to be invalid where it poured into a trust that could be amended, and had been amended after the date of the will.<sup>7</sup> The British Columbia Supreme Court found that Quinn turned on whether the pour-over clause is to an amendable or revocable trust and whether there was the mere possibility of an amendment, and not whether there was an actual amendment.<sup>8</sup> In contrast, in MacCullum Estate, the Nova Scotia Supreme Court distinguished Quinn on the basis that there had been no amendment to the trust in that case.<sup>9</sup> Ontario recently favoured the British Columbia approach in the decision of Vilenski v. Weinrib-Wolfman, where the Ontario Superior Court held that pour-over clauses are not valid if they pour over to a trust that is revocable or amendable, even if the trust existed prior to the will and was never actually amended.<sup>10</sup>

Legislative provisions for succession on intestacy

In an event of intestacy, each province and territory provides for a scheme of property division, typically between the testator's surviving spouse and children – if any – failing which to other relatives as specified. Some provinces allocate the spouse a preferential share prior to dividing the estate between spouse and children. In this context, spouses are married spouses, including same-sex married spouses and, in some provinces and two territories, de facto spouses, providing certain conditions are met. A court process for letters of administration or equivalent provides for the appointment of estate trustees on intestacy.

In Ontario, the preferential share was increased from C$200,000 to C$350,000 for deaths that occurred on 1 March 2021 or later. British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba also make a distinction in determining the share to which a surviving spouse is entitled on an intestacy based on whether there was common issue with the deceased or issue from a different relationship.

As of 1 January 2017, under Part III of the Succession Law Reform Act<sup>11</sup> in Ontario, Section 47(1) was amended to state that for the purposes of determining the beneficiaries on intestacy, the deceased's descendants and relatives conceived and born alive after the deceased's date of death shall inherit as if they were born during the deceased's lifetime and survived, provided specific statutory conditions are met.<sup>12</sup>

Legislative provisions for dependants' support

In all provinces, a dependant can claim support from the deceased's estate, provided he or she stands in a certain relationship with the deceased (typically including a spouse, de facto spouse or minor child) and the deceased was providing him or her with support or had a support obligation at the time of death. In Nova Scotia, a de facto spouse is only considered a dependant if registered as a domestic partner.<sup>13</sup> When considering whether a de facto spouse is considered a dependant, the constitutionality of the distinction between a couple registered as a domestic partnership and a couple in an unregistered common law relationship was upheld in the 2020 decision of LeBlanc v. Cushing Estate.<sup>14</sup>

The quantum of support is determined circumstantially and with judicial discretion, usually taking into account needs and means,<sup>15</sup> and, in some cases, the dependant's accustomed standard of living.<sup>16</sup> Some provinces recognise a moral entitlement to share in a deceased's estate and will vary the distribution in a will or award support on this basis.<sup>17</sup> Recent decisions have also shown that support may be awarded to a dependant in spite of an existing domestic contract if its terms have become unfair with the passage of time.<sup>18</sup>

In Canada, it appears that cases involving entitlement to support in modern non-traditional relationships (usually involving de facto spouses) are on the rise, including in recent decisions in Alberta<sup>19</sup> and British Columbia.<sup>20</sup>

Legislative provisions for matrimonial property rights on death

Property law in Canada falls under the jurisdiction of the provinces and territories; thus the availability and scheme of statutory property division claims by surviving spouses upon death of a spouse vary throughout Canada. The matrimonial property regimes of most provinces and territories provide a surviving spouse with property rights on a first spouse's death. For example, in Ontario, a surviving spouse has a right to elect to claim against the deceased spouse's estate to notionally equalise the property acquired during marriage as between the two of them. If such an equalisation claim is made, he or she thereby loses entitlements, if any, under the deceased spouse's will and to certain other benefits. In all of the provinces and territories except for British Columbia, Alberta, Prince Edward Island and the Yukon, a statutory claim for division of property on death of a spouse is available to legally married spouses, and in New Brunswick, Newfoundland and Labrador; Ontario and Quebec, claims for division of property on death of a spouse are available to legally married spouses only, as well as, in the case of Quebec, the survivor of a couple who have entered into a civil union, and the remaining provinces and territories extend its availability to surviving de facto spouses provided the specific requirements of the governing legislation have been met.

Gifts in wills and public policy

Two Canadian lower court decisions (one decision from New Brunswick and another from an Ontario court) limited testamentary freedom by altering gifts in wills for public policy reasons. The New Brunswick decision of McCorkill v. Streed<sup>21</sup> had the effect of striking an unconditional bequest to a racist corporation on the basis of public policy. This decision was upheld on appeal and an application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada was dismissed.<sup>22</sup> In the Ontario decision of Spence v. BMO Trust Co,<sup>23</sup> a court struck the entire will of a testator who was survived by two adult daughters (neither of whom qualified as dependants) where one daughter was entirely left out of the distribution of the estate. The will stated the testator had excluded the daughter because she had not communicated with him for years. Based on affidavit evidence, however, the court concluded that the real reason for the daughter's exclusion was that she had had a child with a man of a different race. Again, the doctrine of public policy was employed and the entire will was struck down with the result that both daughters shared in the estate equally on intestacy. The Ontario Court of Appeal reversed the decision, thereby confirming in this instance that testators do not have any obligation to benefit persons who they have no legal obligation to support or otherwise benefit (e.g., non-dependent adult children).<sup>24</sup> In a 2019 Nova Scotia case, the court held that testamentary freedom is a decision of fundamental personal choice, which is protected under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The court 'read down' Nova Scotia legislation that would otherwise have given non-dependant adult children of a testator the right to make a claim for support as a dependant of their parent's estate to exclude them.<sup>25</sup> The Nova Scotia Court of Appeal recently overturned the trial decision and dismissed the case based on evidentiary issues for a public interest standing case,<sup>26</sup> which leaves the door open for a further constitutional challenge.

Mutual wills

In a 2016 Ontario lower court decision, two spouses executed wills simultaneously leaving everything to the survivor of them, followed by an identical gift to their four children (each spouse having two children from a prior marriage). After the husband's death, the wife made a new will and gifted her estate to her two adult children, then she subsequently died. On an application commenced by the husband's two adult children, the court found that while there was not a direct written or oral agreement that the spouses' original wills were mutual wills, as a result of the extrinsic evidence presented – including with respect to the family context – an oral contract had existed between the spouses and, by virtue of it, neither spouse was entitled to vary his or her will without the consent of the other spouse. The court held that the estate of the surviving spouse was to be divided among all four children.<sup>27</sup> In a similar case, the testator and his wife executed wills without receiving legal advice. The testator left his entire estate to his wife and, if she predeceased him, the estate went to his two stepchildren. The wife died and, two days later, the testator executed a will leaving his entire estate to his biological children. The testator's stepchildren brought an application regarding the validity of the second will, questioning the capacity of the testator. However, the court found no evidence or agreement to support the argument that mutual wills existed between the couple. The second will was valid.<sup>28</sup> The Ontario Court of Appeal recently reinforced that there must be clear evidence of a mutual wills agreement for wills to be found to be mutual, and that the onus on the party alleging a mutual wills agreement is ‘heavy’.<sup>29</sup>

iii Cross-border developments

Changes to US transfer tax

Canada is home to many dual citizens, including US–Canadian citizens. Many Canadians own holiday, real or personal property in the United States, or spend significant time in the United States. A number of Canadians are, as a result, subject to the US transfer tax regime (US estate, gift and generation-skipping transfer taxes) and are attentive to any changes related to it. Following the American Taxpayer Relief Act of 2012, which became law on 2 January 2013, the US exemption from estate tax was US$5 million, indexed for inflation, and the maximum rate of US estate tax increased from 35 to 40 per cent, both permanently, subject to future legislation.

On 22 December 2017, President Trump signed into law the Tax Cuts and Jobs Act, which temporarily doubles the federal estate and gift tax exemption to US$12.92 million for 2023, indexed for inflation. The increase is effective until 2025. Unless permanent legislation is enacted, the exemption will return to the pre-2018 regime in 2026. Where applicable, the US estate and gift tax exemption remains unified.

Income tax-related reporting requirements

FATCA, introduced to combat offshore tax evasion, affects Canadians with US connections and Canadian financial institutions. Final regulations under FATCA set out detailed reporting and withholding requirements for non-US financial institutions with respect to accounts with certain US connections, including those beneficially owned by US citizens. Information to be reported includes identifying information, and information about the values of accounts and transaction amounts. Other non-US entities (and certain Canadian trusts) are also required to report the ownership or beneficial interests of US citizens.

Under FATCA, such information is generally required to be provided directly to the US Internal Revenue Service (IRS) by non-US financial institutions and entities. Canada has in effect a Model 1 type IGA with the United States. Designed to ease compliance with FATCA, the IGA modifies FATCA’s provisions in respect of Canadian financial institutions and other Canadian entities, and expands the tax information exchange provisions between Canada and the United States. Pursuant to the IGA, Canadian financial institutions generally report information to the CRA rather than directly to the IRS, although they are generally required to register with the IRS to obtain an identification number. By complying with the IGA, Canadian financial institutions avoid a 30 per cent withholding requirement under FATCA on certain payments to them. In addition, certain Canadian-registered plans are exempt from reporting under the IGA, and local financial institutions may be entitled to additional relief.

A self-reporting scheme applies to US persons (including US citizens, green card holders and certain persons who spend a substantial amount of time in the United States) in Canada and elsewhere that may require reporting of non-US bank and financial accounts on a report of foreign bank and financial accounts. Under FATCA, US persons must generally also report certain non-US financial assets exceeding threshold values on a statement of specified foreign financial assets (Form 8938), filed with their tax returns.

In June 2015, Canada signed the multilateral competent authority agreement (MCAA), which provides for a coordinated arrangement for the automatic exchange of financial account information among various countries. Under the MCAA, Canada agreed to implement the OECD's CRS. As of 1 July 2017, financial institutions located in Canada are subject to the CRS and are required to provide the CRA with certain information pertaining to accounts and account holders. The first information exchanges took place in June 2018. The CRS is based on FATCA and is similar in effect.

Uniform substitute decision-making legislation

The Uniform Law Conference of Canada (ULCC) adopted the Uniform Interjurisdictional Recognition of Substitute Decision-Making Documents Act (Uniform Act) in August 2016.

The Uniform Act is a joint project of the ULCC and the Uniform Law Commission of the United States (ULC), which was undertaken to promote cross-border portability and utility of substitute decision-making documents for property and personal care. The ULC adopted its version of the Uniform Act in July 2014, and US states may now consider enacting it internally. To date, Idaho, Connecticut and Alaska have enacted it. It is up to each Canadian province and territory to consider adopting and implementing the Uniform Act. This new uniform legislation in each jurisdiction marks a significant step forward in promoting cross-border effectiveness of powers of attorney.

Under the ULCC Uniform Act, which differs from the ULC one, a substitute decision-making document will be formally valid if it complies with any of the following:

- a* the law indicated in the document;
- b* the law of the jurisdiction in which it was executed;
- c* the jurisdiction in which the individual was habitually resident; or
- d* the law of the place where it is to be used.

In the Canadian Uniform Act, the application of the governing law can only be refused if its application would be manifestly contrary to the public policy of the enacting province or territory, which the notes to the Uniform Act indicate in matters relating to personal care, including specific medical procedures. The Uniform Acts provide for the ability of a third party to rely on a document as well as, subject to certain exceptions, the obligation of third parties within a reasonable time to accept a substitute decision-making document and not require an additional or different form of authority. It also provides for a court order mandating acceptance and liability for legal costs for refusal to accept a substitute decision-making document in violation of each Uniform Act. Little progress has been forthcoming to adopt the Canadian Uniform Act. The Alberta Law Reform Institute reviewed it and conducted a broad consultation, but there was no broad support for its implementation.

Recognition of foreign trusts

The Hague Convention of the Law Applicable to Trusts and on Their Recognition, adopted in 1984 by the Hague Conference on Private International Law, was ratified by Canada and is in effect in all Canadian common law provinces.

iv Applicable changes affecting personal property

Same-sex marriage and Quebec civil unions

In 2005, Canada legalised same-sex marriage and, as a result, a broad array of statutory and common law rights have been available to same-sex married spouses, including rights to share in an estate upon intestacy and any rights to property division under provincial family law statutes. Quebec also solemnises a civil union for same-sex or opposite-sex couples, which confers similar rights to marriage.

Rights of de facto spouses

For unmarried de facto spouses, Canada recognises a limited subset of legal rights. De facto spouses are treated similarly to married spouses for various purposes, including taxation and certain government benefits, but significant gaps remain in respect of property rights on relationship breakdown and death, although this varies by province and territory. On 1 January 2020, Alberta introduced the Matrimonial Property Act,<sup>30</sup> which provides that the same property division rules will apply to both married spouses and couples in a relationship of interdependence.

Spousal support provisions for de facto spouses in Quebec

In 2013, the Supreme Court of Canada delivered its decision in Quebec (Attorney General) v. A,<sup>31</sup> also known as Lola v. Eric. Lola (not her real name) claimed spousal support and property rights from her billionaire de facto spouse Eric. The province of Quebec has a greater percentage of de facto spouses than any other province (approximately 39.9 per cent in 2016, with the national average being 21.3 per cent), and there are few legal rights provided to these spouses on relationship breakdown.<sup>32</sup> While a majority of the Supreme Court agreed with the Quebec Court of Appeal in finding that Article 585 of the Quebec Civil Code, which does not provide spousal support for de facto spouses, although it provides for support among married or civil union spouses, discriminates against de facto spouses on equality grounds, the discrimination is justified on the principle of respecting individual couples' choice and autonomy.

Common law property division for de facto spouses

In Kerr v. Baranow and Vanasse v. Seguin,<sup>33</sup> the Supreme Court reviewed the principles of unjust enrichment and resulting trust applicable to de facto spouses on relationship breakdown. After a relationship of over 25 years, Ms Kerr claimed property and support entitlements. Both parties had worked and Mr Baranow had cared for Ms Kerr after she had suffered a stroke. The Court reviewed the law of unjust enrichment applicable to de facto spouses not included in most provincial statutory property division schemes. The elements of the claim are enrichment of one spouse, the corresponding deprivation of another and absence of juristic reason (such as a contract), and remedies have included a constructive trust and monetary amounts, including amounts relating to value received. Where appropriate, the claimant should be treated as a co-venturer in a joint family venture and should share the couple's mutual gains. Indicia of a joint family venture include mutual effort, economic integration, intention and priority to the family, and there must also be a link between the contribution and wealth accumulated. A new trial was ordered in Kerr regarding unjust enrichment. A monetary remedy is not limited to a value-received approach, and in Vanasse, the Supreme Court upheld a monetary award granted at trial to a partner who had cared for a young family and given up career opportunities during a 12-year relationship.

Discretionary trust interests as matrimonial property

British Columbia's Family Law Act is the first Canadian family law statute to expressly address discretionary trust interests in the division of family property by categorising certain beneficial interests in property held in discretionary trusts as excluded property. Problems with the original wording of the Act have been rectified by amendments that came into force on 26 May 2014, thereby clarifying that only the increase in value of the spouse's beneficial interest in a discretionary trust will be subject to division on separation (rather than the increase in value of all of the property in the trust, as originally drafted). The issue of whether an interest in a discretionary trust can be included for the purpose of calculating a spouse's net family property was examined in the 2022 British Columbia case, Cottrell v. Cottrell.<sup>34</sup> The Court differentiated between a beneficial interest in discretionary trust property and the actual property held in a trust. Only the increase in the beneficial interest will be considered family property under British Columbia's family law legislation. In this case, the beneficiary's discretionary interest was uncertain as she did not have the ability to compel a distribution. The Court held that the claimant had the burden of proving that the beneficiary's interest in the trust increased (as opposed to the value of the property held in the trust), and in this case the claimant did not meet this burden. Valuation of these interests on separation will continue to remain a live and litigious issue in British Columbia and throughout Canada, as evidenced by reported decisions in Saskatchewan,<sup>35</sup> Alberta<sup>36</sup> and Ontario,<sup>37</sup> with relatively little valuation analyses having been reported to date.

Legal presumptions relating to jointly held property clarified and effect of transfer examined

In two companion cases, Pecore v. Pecore<sup>38</sup> and Madsen Estate v. Saylor,<sup>39</sup> the Supreme Court of Canada clarified the common law presumptions of resulting trust and advancement, which are legal presumptions subject to being rebutted on the civil standard of proof. The Court clarified that a recipient of gratuitously transferred personal property is generally presumed to hold it on resulting trust for the donor. The presumption that the property so transferred is advanced to the donor that has historically applied to certain family relationships, applies to transfers between a parent and minor child (and not from parent to adult child). This legal presumption may be rebutted, and the onus is on the party alleging the gratuitous transfer was intended as a gift.

Joint ownership continues to be a legal minefield in the context of estates and estate planning across the country.<sup>40</sup> The court will look at various factors when considering whether the presumption has been rebutted, including evidence of intention, tax treatment of the property, and contribution of funds. Court decisions continue to highlight the importance of providing clear evidence of intention, whether that is through supporting documentation or a third party.

The 2020 Ontario Superior Court of Justice decision in Calmusky v. Calmusky<sup>41</sup> added a further dimension to the presumption of resulting trust when it applied the presumption of a resulting trust to a registered account designated to an adult beneficiary. However, in the 2021 Ontario Superior Court decision in Mak (Estate) v. Mak, the Court came to the opposite conclusion and held a resulting trust cannot apply to a beneficiary designation of such a plan.<sup>42</sup> A 2021 Nova Scotia decision also declined to follow Calmusky.<sup>43</sup> In addition, a 2021 Alberta decision held that a beneficiary designation of a tax-free savings account is testamentary in nature, and, referring to Mak, a resulting trust cannot apply to it.<sup>44</sup> These conflicting decisions have left uncertainty for lawyers and financial advisers with respect to beneficiary designations.

Adding more uncertainty to joint ownership, in the decision of Marley v. Salga,<sup>45</sup> the Ontario Superior Court expanded the ways in which spouses can sever a joint tenancy through a course of dealing. In this case, the deceased and his widow owned their matrimonial home as joint tenants with right of survivorship. The deceased dealt with his one-half interest in the home under his will and the Court relied on evidence to support that the widow had knowledge of the deceased's steps to deal with his one-half interest, which the Court held evidenced a mutual intention to hold the home as equal tenants-in-common. This decision was upheld at the Ontario Court of Appeal.<sup>46</sup>

In Quebec, there is no equivalent to joint tenancy or rights of survivorship. In Gauthier v. Gauthier,<sup>47</sup> the deceased and his son signed an account-opening agreement in Florida that held the deceased's inheritance. The will named the deceased's three children as beneficiaries, but the son submitted that the account agreement left the inheritance to him, or, in the alternative, that his father intended to gift the account. The Court did not apply Pecore, but rather looked to the deceased's intentions. The Court held that the deceased did not intend to gift the account.

Legal presumption of advancement as between spouses in BC

In F(VJ) v. W(SK),<sup>48</sup> the British Columbia Court of Appeal confirmed the common law presumption of advancement between spouses was not abolished by the enactment of that province's new Family Law Act<sup>49</sup> in 2011, and noted that a BC statute contained no express provision altering the impact of or abolishing the presumption as was the case in the family law statutes of other Canadian jurisdictions such as Alberta, Saskatchewan and Ontario. However, in HCF v. DTF,<sup>50</sup> the British Columbia Superior Court made a compelling finding that the presumption of advancement is an outdated concept and cannot co-exist with the property division scheme under the Family Law Act. The Court held that the husband who owned excluded property was able to retain that exclusion on separation notwithstanding that he gifted it to his wife. The 2019 British Columbia Court of Appeal decision of Namdarpour v. Vahman<sup>51</sup> illustrated that the presumption of advancement is an evidentiary presumption that may operate where the judge is unable to reach a conclusion about the transferor's actual intention.

Exempting certain matrimonial property from the equalisation regime

The 2012 Ontario Court of Appeal decision in Spencer v. Riesberry<sup>52</sup> held that in the circumstances, a matrimonial property held by a family trust where one of the beneficiaries resided did not qualify as a matrimonial home for the purposes of Ontario's Family Law Act and excluded it from the equalisation calculation as the beneficiary in question did not have an interest in the property within the meaning of the Act (although the value of the interest in the trust was still included for the purposes of the calculation). This case represents a frustration of the matrimonial home protection contained in the Act, as well as a potential circumvention of the usual requirements for the spouse's consent on the sale or encumbrance of a matrimonial home and the right of possession for the non-titled spouse.

The Supreme Court of Canada decision in Yared v. Karam<sup>53</sup> found that a family home held in a trust that one spouse controls can be included in a married couple's family patrimony to be divided equally between the spouses on the breakdown of a marriage. A family patrimony, which is unique to Quebec, is created when a couple marries and includes the property belonging to spouses that they use to meet their family's needs. Under Quebec's Civil Code, 'rights which confer use' are included in the family patrimony, and the Court held that the control that the trustee had over the trust property gave him rights that confer use. This case illustrates Quebec's treatment of trusts in the family law context and how the civil law regime in Quebec differs from the common law regime in the rest of Canada.

Proprietary estoppel

The equitable claim of proprietary estoppel was successfully used in two 2014 Ontario cases as the basis for a cause of action in respect of an unfulfilled or reneged promise or assurance relating to a cottage property.<sup>54</sup> In both Clarke v. Johnson and Love v. Schumacher, the equity resulted in the appropriate remedy being, based on the facts and the exercise of judicial discretion, a proprietary one in the form of an exclusive, irrevocable and time-specific licence (as a monetary award was found in both instances to be inappropriate or insufficient). In both decisions, the courts followed the modern UK test to establish proprietary estoppel, being the establishment of three criteria: encouragement or acquiescence in respect of land; detrimental reliance; and unconscionability.

A third case arising in British Columbia, resulting in a successful proprietary estoppel claim involving a horse farm that saw the trial judge award the entire horse farm to the applicant, was remitted back to the trial judge to assess the outstanding claims of unjust enrichment and express or implied trust, as well as the proportionality of the trial judge's remedy to the proprietary estoppel claim.<sup>55</sup> Cowper-Smith v. Morgan<sup>56</sup> is a British Columbia appellate court decision in which the proprietary estoppel claim was unsuccessful as the person against whom the claim was advanced did not own the property in question at the time the assurance or representation was made. On appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada, the court ruling clarified the test for proprietary estoppel and expanded its scope. The British Columbia appellate court decision was overturned and the Court found that proprietary estoppel had been established by the appellants. The Court found that reliance on an expectation to enjoy a right or benefit over a property, even without an interest in such property, is reasonable.

Execution of estate planning documents during the covid-19 pandemic and beyond

Each province and territory has its own formal requirements for making a valid will and powers of attorney. In every province and territory except for Quebec, the law requires a will to be in writing and signed at the end by the will-maker in the presence of two witnesses, who each in turn sign the will in the presence of the will-maker and each other (Manitoba also has additional requirements of initialling each page). A similar process must be followed for a continuing or enduring power of attorney for property and for personal care, although the number of witnesses varies from one to two among the provinces and territories.

To address the problem of executing estate planning documents during the covid-19 pandemic, all of the provinces and territories except for Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, Yukon, the Northwest Territories and Nunavut, released emergency orders that temporarily allowed for the virtual execution of wills and powers of attorney by means of 'audio-visual communication technology'. Quebec's emergency legislation allows electronic signing of notarial wills, which are wills that a notary prepares and that the will-maker signs in the virtual presence of the notary and another witness.

Some provinces have gone so far as making permanent changes to their legislation to adopt technology in the execution of estate planning documents. Ontario, British Columbia, Manitoba and Saskatchewan allow for the virtual execution of wills and powers of attorney. Some of the provinces also require that one of the witnesses should be a lawyer. British Columbia recognises electronic wills that are created on a computer and signed electronically and for which there is no printed copy, the first Canadian jurisdiction to do so.

IV WEALTH STRUCTURING AND REGULATION

i Common vehicles for wealth structuring

Trusts and holding companies are perhaps two of the most common vehicles used in wealth structuring.

Trusts

Income splitting

Trusts can be established inter vivos or by will. Inter vivos trusts are often used to split income with family members, where the trust earns income and acts as a conduit to allocate income, including taxable capital gains, among beneficiaries who are subject to lower rates. Effective planning involves careful attention to the possible application of the attribution rules, which can attribute income back to a high-tax rate taxpayer.

Trusts used in conjunction with an 'estate freeze'

Trusts are also commonly used in conjunction with an estate freeze to hold growth property for future generations, such as common shares of a private company that are expected to grow in value, and thereby defer taxation on any gains until the future rather than until the death of the founder. This can achieve significant tax savings. The use of a trust can allow for control of the timing of distribution of property, for selection of beneficiaries and for general wealth protection purposes. Generally, a fully discretionary trust is used for such purposes.

Trusts as will substitutes

Trusts are also increasingly used as will substitutes, in particular 'alter ego' and 'joint partner' trusts that are specifically defined under Canadian income tax legislation and allow persons aged 65 and over, provided certain conditions are met, to roll over capital property on a tax-deferred basis, as opposed to triggering capital gains. Alter ego and joint partner trusts are often used to provide for succession to property on the death of the spouse or spouses as a substitute to a will. They may offer benefits such as:

- a* avoiding expensive court fees, probate taxes and the protracted court probate process;
- b* more privacy than a will;
- c* ensuring capital succession to property on death; and
- d* protection against estate litigation, including will challenges and other claims arising on death.

Trusts may also offer an effective and sophisticated vehicle to manage assets on incapacity as a primary alternative to a power of attorney.

Use of testamentary trusts for income splitting and other benefits

Testamentary trusts (trusts created under a will) have been used to provide for income splitting after the testator's death. Certain estates and testamentary trusts are taxed at the graduated rates applicable to individuals, whereas trusts established during a lifetime are subject to the top marginal tax rates applicable to individuals. Prior to 2016, testamentary trusts allowed for income splitting between the trust and one or more beneficiaries, which resulted in significant tax savings. However, commencing in 2016, testamentary trusts with exceptions for graduated rate estates and for qualified disability trusts are subject to the top tax rate applicable to individuals and, consequently, the above tax benefits have been eliminated, although it will still be possible to ‘sprinkle’ income among a group of beneficiaries of a discretionary testamentary trust if the trust terms permit. In addition, the use of a testamentary trust may provide for capital succession planning and can safeguard against beneficiaries’ matrimonial and creditor claims, among other benefits.

Multiple wills used to minimise probate fees

Multiple wills are increasingly used in certain provinces to minimise estate administration tax and probate fees. For example, in Ontario, estate administration tax is approximately 1.5 per cent of the value of estate assets. Assets are often segregated under two wills: a primary will and a secondary will. Assets that generally do not require a probated will to administer by way of proof of executors’ authority to third parties, such as financial institutions and purchasers of land property, are segregated under a secondary will. The secondary will would typically include private company shares, family loans, tangible personal property and beneficial trust interests. Only the primary will is typically probated, and applicable tax or court fees are then based on the value of the assets passing under the primary will, which is generally expected to be a more modest asset value base.

Holding companies

Holding companies are a common feature of Canadian estate planning. They are often used to hold investment assets, including US securities and certain other US situs assets to protect against exposure to US estate tax, to defer tax on active business income where shares of an active business are held by the holding company, to split income, including in conjunction with use of a family trust, and for asset protection and retirement planning.

Potential tax advantages of holding companies

The utility of an investment holding company to earn investment income at a lower tax rate than if earned personally will depend on changing tax rates, which historically have at certain times offered tax advantages and at other times have been neutral and less advantageous.

Holding companies are also used in conjunction with probate fee and estate tax minimisation strategies as outlined above. Private company shares can pass under a secondary will, which typically may not need to be probated, thereby saving fees and tax, which can be significant where the shares have a high value. There is potential for double taxation on death where assets are held in a holding company, because a deceased person will be subject to personal taxation on the deemed disposition of the shares of the holding company giving rise to possible taxable capital gains, and also the same gains may be reflected in the holding company’s underlying assets, on which tax will be paid at the corporate level on the sale of the assets or wind-up of the company. It is therefore necessary to implement proper post-mortem tax planning to avoid potential double taxation on death.

ii Anti-money laundering regime and new transparency requirements

The Proceeds of Crime (Money Laundering) and Terrorist Financing Act came into effect in 2001. It introduced requirements for a compliance regime, record-keeping, client identification and reporting. Reporting entities must implement a compliance regime, keep certain records, obtain certain client identification and report suspicious transactions to an independent agency, the FINTRAC. Certain other financial transactions, as well as terrorist property, must also be reported. All regulated entities, starting from 1 June 2021, are required to obtain and take reasonable steps to confirm the accuracy of beneficial ownership information they obtain, and not just in certain sectors. Reporting entities include financial institutions such as banks, trust companies, loan companies, life insurance companies, brokers and agents, securities dealers, accountants and accounting firms carrying out certain transactions, real estate brokers, and certain others. The legislation imposes harsh financial and criminal penalties, including imprisonment, for failure to report. Reporting entities have to send large cash transaction reports to the FINTRAC when they receive an amount of C$10,000 or more in cash in the course of a single transaction, and financial entities, money service businesses and casinos have to report incoming and outgoing international electronic funds transfers of C$10,000 or more in a single transaction.

In the past few years, initiatives to require company, trust and real estate transparency have been prolific on the global stage. In Canada, they form a backdrop to recent legislative proposals and changes. In 2018, the federal government introduced legislation that came into effect on 13 June 2019, which amended the Canada Business Corporations Act to require that corporations collect and keep a register of specified information regarding those who have significant control over a corporation, including registered shareholders, beneficial owners of shares and persons who have direct or indirect influence, and as a result have control over the corporation. The information is not to be publicly available, but is to be available to directors, shareholders and creditors of the corporation. In the 19 April 2021 federal budget, the government finally announced it would build and implement a publicly accessible corporate beneficial ownership registry by 2025, and has allocated C$2.1 million for such purpose. This appears to be a modest amount given the complexity, magnitude and importance of a public registry, in particular given criticism that Canada has been lax in its enforcement of its money laundering rules, and that significant funds are laundered in Canada as a result, including through shell corporations. Legislative amendments to the Canada Business Corporations Act were introduced on 22 March 2023 to create a public beneficial ownership registry, which will provide certain details on the beneficial owners of Canadian corporations to the public.

In December 2017, the Canadian finance ministers entered into an agreement to strengthen beneficial ownership transparency, which included a commitment on the part of the provinces to make legislative changes to require provincially incorporated corporations to maintain information on beneficial owners. Ten jurisdictions have forged ahead with legislative changes that contain similar requirements to those under the new federal legislation, and only four jurisdictions, Alberta and the three territories, have not proposed or implemented this type of legislation at the time of writing. In the autumn of 2019, Quebec began corporate transparency consultations, and in the 2020–2021 budget, the government introduced measures that would require enterprises to obtain information on beneficial owners for disclosure to the publicly accessible Registraire des entreprises du Québec, and to make it possible to do research on an enterprise using the name and address of a natural person. On 8 June 2021, new legislation was passed and, as of March 31, 2023 is now in effect.

On the real estate front, British Columbia's Land Owner Transparency Act together with the Land Owner Transparency Regulation came into force on 30 November 2020, which created a new public registry for beneficial ownership of real estate in the province. Corporations, trustees and partners are required to provide specified information on those who have a beneficial interest in land, a significant interest in a corporation that owns land or own an interest in land through a partnership, with certain restrictions. The stated intention of the registry is to prevent tax evasion, fraud and money laundering by ending anonymous or hidden ownership of real estate. The registry opened to the public on 30 April 2021. It remains to be seen whether this initiative will head east and roll out through other Canadian jurisdictions. In Quebec, in February 2019, a regulation was published that aimed at identifying non-resident purchasers of residential property. There is speculation that this is the first step towards a tax on non-residents, as currently exists in certain designated areas of British Columbia and now all of Ontario. In Ontario, since May 2017, additional disclosure has been required in making a real estate transfer pursuant to the Land Transfer Act, which includes disclosure of the beneficial ownership of the transferred property; however, this information is not publicly available.

With respect to trusts, as previously noted, new trust reporting and disclosure rules are in effect. All Canadian-resident trusts with very limited exceptions will be required to file an annual T3 trust tax and information return for 2023 whether or not the trust earned income in any year. The provision of this information erodes privacy in the use of trusts and will provide substantial information to the government that was previously not available to it.

V CONCLUSIONS AND OUTLOOK

Private client practice continues to be a strong growth area. While we can now practice in new ways, many of which involve using digital technology, which allows clients a better array of options than a singular reliance on traditional bricks and mortar practice allowed for, with the return of in-person meetings, the challenge will be how to use the available options to serve each client's needs in their best interests and achieve a good balance.

In Canada, we have seen the introduction of a reformed AMT targeted at high income earners, more trust and corporate transparency rules now in effect, and more tax compliance in general for many. Income and wealth inequality and redistribution of wealth underpin many of these reforms, not just revenue generation. Wealth and income inequality has only increased with the pandemic, and even more with recent economic uncertainty and high levels of inflation. Demand is on the rise for private client services due to demographic changes and an aging population. There is an increasing trend for more specialisation among several discreet practice areas of private client work, and consolidation among professional advisers able to provide such specialised advice.
